

Deer Human Aggression

Outside of situations where people are trying to capture, harm or kill deer or their young, aggression of wild deer toward humans is extremely rare. Instead of annually killing a large number of suburban deer in an attempt to lower the risk of an already extremely unlikely possibility, it simply makes sense to refrain from attempting to capture, harm or kill the deer or their young in the first place.